

Is Greeted With Threats

Morning Oregonian      28th June 1908

Brutality Another Count on Which Mrs. Brimmer Asks Divorce.

“I will wring your damned neck and throw your head out into the street.”

That remark was not addressed by William Brimmer to a cackling rooster which kept him awake nights it might have been justified as such. It was the picturesque salutation with which he greeted Mrs. Brimmer on his return to their home at 716 East Davis street not long ago. And now Mrs. Brimmer wishes a divorce.

Mrs. Brimmer filed her suit with the Circuit Court yesterday afternoon. In her complaint she cites the foregoing bon mot as a sample of Brimmer's sense of humor. She doesn't want to live with him a minute longer.

The Brimmers were married May 15, 1907 in Benton County, Washington. He became brutal at once, she says, and aside from the neck-wringing episode, he, on one occasion, knocked her down and kicked her. Late one night he ordered her to pack and go. She started to pack. The noise bothered him and he told her to keep quiet until morning and then go. She did so. She not only wants a decree of absolute divorce, but she wants her maiden name back, Bessie May Robinson.