It was first observed by the farmer, Mr. George Bremner, who was awakened by the smell of smoke. The fire having been got under, Mr. Bremner entered the barn and stumbled across a dead body, which he discovered to be that of his son. The lad, it appears, had been at Inverurie in the evening, and had not returned when the others went to bed. It is believed that on coming home he had been attracted by the fire, and had entered the barn, when he had at once been suffocated by the smoking straw."
